The attendance is estimated at about 15,000. Only a few of the twenty-dollar seats are still vacant.

At 1:11 o'clock (1:40 Washington time) Johnson made his appearance, being applicated by the enthusiastic cubans. One minute later he crawled through the ropes clad in a gray bathrobe and wearing his usual golden smile. The negro's first move was to ascertain where his wife was located. The race course where the fight was held is surrounded with green hills, some of which are topped with towering palms. The fight management, seeing the possibility of moving picture machines equipped with telescopic lenses, operating from the hills, had guards stationed at all the vantage points overlooking the fight arens.

At 11:30 o'clock, one hour before the fight was scheduled to start, several thousand persons had arrived and found seats, but the more expensive locations contained but few spectators.

The first notables to reach the ringside scats were the mayor of Havana and the speaker of the Cuban house of representatives.

Mat Hinkel of Cleveland, the alternate referree of the big bout, came in a few minutes after the mayor, and at once began to help with the final arrangements.

By this time a number of soldiers had taken up their position around the ring inclosure. As a matter of fact soldiers at this hour seemed to constitute half of the crowd.

The ring was finished shortly before noon. While the strongest, it undoubtedly was also the crudest ever erected for a world championship fight.
